A SHORT DISCOURSE ON THE SECRET OF TRANQUILLITY.

the mistake, as, when she entered the By Rev. William Hayne Leavell, D. D., Pastor First Presbyterian Church, Houston, Tex.

"I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therein to be content."-Philippians Iv, 11. If we consider how little frequent contentment in the actual situation is found among men, how much they fret and worry over things as they are, we will see that competency to meet the situation is a very great secret, a secret which so many of us never | to favor the godless and careless. But

It is a help and an encouragement in our the claim of having found the secret, particularly when he is a man who commands our respect, and whom we believe, even this astonishing claim.

Such a man was the Apostle Paul, and he makes the claim in the calmest and most absolute fashion. There is no spirit of boasting here; he is not calling attention foolish claim to wish away the actual and to his superiority over others, is not thanking God, as did the Pharisee, that he is "not as other men." But in the simplest, most spontaneous fashion, as if it was the most natural thing in the world, he says that he ing, in every actual or possible situation of life that Providence would assign him.

The claim is just this: He is content with, he is self-sufficing in, he is competent to every actual or possible situation. There is no fretting when the situation is not such shrinking, no loss of heart and purpose and the obstructions mount high. As he reviews his career, as he surveys the present, or even looks into the future, he is so calm, so certain that nothing can develop to ruffle the serenity of his content, as to make

Think what a splendid claim it is! Few of us are content with our present circumstances, and those few can easily imagine a possible situation which would blow our content to the winds. Paul does not hesitate to descend into the realm where we find it most difficult to be content-the realm of the material. In the matter of personal belongings and personal comforts he declares that he has learned how to

MAN AND HIS SHIRTWAIST.

Manufacturers Who Do Not Believe the Fashion Will Be Popular.

The shirt manufacturers do not believe in how to do. We know what it is to be the shirtwaist man. They don't approve of abased, to be in want, even to suffer him. It has evolved the prettiest shirts men ever wore. The possibility of trotting around in shirt sleeves wakened men to a sense of responsibility about their shirts. They don't want shirt waists, but they do want good looking shirts. We've noticed a big increase in fastidiousness this season. Men are more careful about pattern and cut and color and all the little details than ever before. All the shirt makers speak of it. "If the men take off their coats this summer they are going to have good shirts to display. What's more, every move has been toward a refinement of taste. The shirt of the season is what I call a gentleman's shirt. There were always men who wore such garments, but now the big crowd has come around to them. The loud patterns and glaring colors are practically dead. We can't sell them. The checks and the bright pinks won't go even with the class that used to love them. "Cool blue and white is the thing in colors, and violet and white is a favorite, too, quickly unwearable in hot weather. The white one looks cool, is universally becoming, doesn't swear at any tie and can't be faded in the laundry. "Shirts pleated in the front are going to be worn more than ever before. Pleats in the back make a shirt look effeminate. Pleats in the front don't: but men never cared to pay extra for having pleats to be hidden under waistcoats and coats. The fact that they are being called for now is one of the straws which show the effect of the shirt waist tide. "The buttons are another thing to which more care is being given. Probably you've noticed how many smoked pearl buttons are being used. They have to be matched up in tone to harmonize with the color in the goods. That's altogether a new "Then the shirt waist influence rang the final knell of the detachable cuff. The cuffs were always sent to the laundry more frequently than the shirts and, of course, faded more. With a coat, the difference didn't show, but without a coat it was ghastly. Men noticed the fault for the first time. Now almost all the neglige shirts are ordered with cuffs attached, even when the buyer isn't particularly fastidious. The cuffs are narrower this year, and the question of pointed or rounded corners epends upon the maker or the customer's faste. Neither is incorrect. The round cuff is undoubtedly prettier in line and stands

"As for collars, well, there isn't much hange. I've an idea the men will stick to the high turn-over collars for neglige. They are beastly hot, but they do stay up well, just on account of the hot ten ply, and they are universally becoming. Manufacturers are doing their best to get rid of them, because they hinder the sale of expensive ties. A man can't wear anything except a small string or four-in-hand with that collar, and the elaborate ties go begging. Still, when public taste makes the manufacturer may as well keep still.
